PRISONERS UNION | OVERVIEW

We are pleased to provide you with information about PURPLE, what it stands for and why there is such a dire need for the organization throughout this country.

There are roughly 2.4 million people incarcerated in the United States. The largest number in all of American history. With unresolved ethics violations by officers to inmates there will remain constant conflict which can not be resolved due to a gap of mistrust. PURPLE will bridge this gap with hopeful, positive outcomes for both parties. This internal crisis can only be redeveloped with an internal Prisoners' Union that is supported by dedicated outside organizations.

PURPLE's mission is to act as an established liaison between inmates and penal officers. To seek peace, enforce rights and to educate inmates to use the pen and not the sword. There should never be violence between deputies and prisoners.

We look forward to answering all of your questions.

Sincerely,

Corey Miller
PURPLE Founder

PRISONERS UNION | WHAT WILL PURPLE SOLVE

The prisoners union will be the peace of mind behind prison walls. To know you are not forgotten or alone will calm waters between conflicting groups. PURPLE will bring this to prisons. We aim to bring a non-hostile presence where a sufficient quality of life will be legally upheld. Officials will be hesitant to violate the rights of inmates with such an overwhelming presence of the PURPLE union.

Inmates will have a different option to respond to violations which will decrease violence and disturbance. Having help in times of personal crisis have been proven to soothe oncoming confrontations, brutalities, and suicides inside prison walls. PURPLE will lessen their anger, fears and frustrations.

When inmates are released they are groomed with different problem solving tactics. Educated through the PURPLE curriculum they will have learned to be positive and efficient. In time of despair and crisis those released will display productive approaches to conflict as the union teaches. We should see drastic decreases in ethical corruption of penal officials to inmates. A relentless attack to inhumane conditions throughout involved institutions will send immediate warning to other establishments that are in violation.

Purple will set the tone for a no-nonsense movement

PRISONERS UNION | PRISONER'S RIGHTS LAW

Cruel and Unusual Punishments – Every inmate has the right to be free under the Eighth Amendment from inhumane treatment or “cruel and unusual” punishment. Unfortunately, the Eighth Amendment did not clearly define what “cruel and unusual” punishment includes, meaning much of the definition has derived from case law. Any punishment that is considered inhumane treatment, like torture or abuse, or a violation of a person’s basic dignity may be considered cruel and unusual within the discretion of the court.

Sexual Harassment or Sex Crimes – Inmates have a right to be free from sexual harassment or sex crimes, like being raped or molested while in custody.

Right to Complain About Prison Conditions and Access to the Courts – Inmates have the right both to complain about prison conditions and to voice their concerns to prison officials and the courts.

Disabled Prisoners – Inmates with disabilities are entitled to certain reasonable accommodations under the American with Disabilities Act to ensure they receive the same access to prison facilities as those who are not disabled.

Medical and Mental Health Care – Prisoners are entitled to receive medical care and mental health treatment. These treatments are only required to be “adequate,” not the best available or even the standard treatment for those outside of incarceration.

First Amendment Rights – Inmates retain basic First Amendment rights (i.e., free speech and religion), but only to the extent that the exercise of those rights do not interfere with their status as inmates.

Discrimination – Inmates have the right to be free from discrimination while imprisoned. This includes racial segregation, disparate treatment based on ethnicity or religion, or preferences based on age, among others.
